

STANFORD CENTER ON LONGEVITY

WORKING TOGETHER

The remarkable speed with which the Stanford Center on Longevity was established reflects a generous founding gift from Stanford alumnus Richard Rainwater, who recognized one of the most urgent needs of our time: adapting our society to a rapidly aging population. His gift enabled the Center to begin immediately with a core staff and with key programs in place.

Going forward, the Center's work continues to benefit from individuals and organizations that recognize the importance and urgency of redesigning long life. During 2011-2012, the Center received generous funding from individual donors as well as from the MacArthur Network on an Aging Society, Marsh & McLennan Companies, the FINRA Investor Education Foundation, and the National Institute on Aging.

Gifts help the Center embark on new research projects, develop educational programs, collaborate with faculty and disseminate research findings so they can be put into practice. To discuss opportunities for partnering with the Center, please contact:
