Stanford Center on Longevity, July 2010

Comprehensive briefing on major demographic changes underway in the United States. This compendium of charts and analysis provides a framework for thinking about five critical trends that are shaping the new demographic reality: population aging, increased racial and ethnic diversity, changes in living arrangements, evolving health care needs, and challenges to financial well-being. The report captures key data and analysis in one single reference document.

Of particular interest are the sections on Aging and Diversity, pages 9-30.
